

Collins presents that District 12 as a horrible place to live. She tells us that “Men and women with hunched shoulders, swollen knuckles, many who have long since stopped trying to scrub the coal dust out of their broken nails”. This makes me recognise the circumstances the civilians living in District 12, are desperate as they are impoverished as they are not well looked after. Their only option is to work hard all day for little money and in harsh condition. This makes me feel sorrowful for the families living in District 12. It feels like Collins is trying to warn us for the future as in the hunger games books, we learn that the audience enjoy watching the episodes of the children fighting to survive. It relates to us with our reality tv shows, watching people fail the challenge or question. People like watching sad or dramatic stories. Collins creates the strong character, Katniss, who is brought up in the poor district 12. Collins could be telling us that even if we have nothing, we are still strong (who is shown as an example by Katniss).

This is a great start!

You have given me a good Point, supported it with evidence and you have begun to explain that evidence well. I'm really pleased, too, to see that you have started to Link to the writer's bigger ideas and context.
