Collins has shown the theme of dystopian literature by showing that in the games they have to be careful with what they say. ^{who?} ^{why?} This can be shown in the quotation

"A Jabberjay had the ability to memorise and repeat a whole human conversation."

This shows that they don't have much freedom of speech as the Capitol could find out what they are saying and they are also being watched. ^{nice explanation!} Collins ~~has~~ ^{has} included the Jabberjay as a way to show how much control the Capitol have over the districts. It also suggests that they are no longer individuals in their own rights, due to the fear of being punished. In modern context

~~the~~ it could be taken from the quote that in the modern day the government listens through phones. Throughout the text Collins shows a loss of personal identity within the characters which creates dystopia.

yes - what methods are used to reinforce that idea?

Nice idea! Is that a concern for Collins? Explain why the text made you think of this

You are using the PEEZL steps and I'm really pleased that you thought of a modern concern that might have inspired the text... it just needs a little more explanation. Try to tell me how that real life concern has impacted the text or our feelings towards it.
