

Hunger Games Week 9 Homework

Collins book the hunger games is a great example of dystopian fiction because it follows the conventions of dystopian literature. In her depiction of the districts struggle for survival she shows us that one of the main themes is death. Katniss dad was “blown to bits in a mine explosion. There was nothing left of him to bury” this shows us that working in the mines can be very dangerous at any moment you could die. “District Twelve. Where you can starve to death in safety” this suggests that living in district 12 is also deadly. This demonstrates that death is common in district 12 the people are worried if today will be there last or someone they knows last, thus this re-enforces the fact that they are struggling for survival. Collins uses the noun “safety” which means feeling protected, harm free and injury free but they are not safe. Indeed if they are going to starve to death then they are going to be hungry, so they would feel uncomfortable and if they were on the verge of death then they would feel at risk. We know that some of the men in Collins family were soldiers in the war she must have heard lots of things that would have inspired her. Throughout the text it is clear that Collins uses the dangerous jobs and not being able to get enough food for there entire family to create a dystopian world.
